

The Past is the Future

Original “slow art” by Kristen Palana

This artwork is designed to inspire a sense of deep connection, continuity, and wonder —a reminder that the wisdom of our ancestors is not behind us but woven into the present moment, waiting to be recognized.

This piece draws on the mathematical language of nature. Four Fibonacci spirals form a golden mean structure, the same ratio found in nautilus shells and the arms of galaxies. The number four carries its own weight: across cultures and throughout history it has represented completeness, the cardinal directions, the four elements, and the cycles of time.

Each section of the composition draws on the visual language of a different ancient civilization, chosen for what that culture understood about nature, cosmos, and our place within both.

Suggested Placement: Living rooms, home offices, libraries, meditation spaces, yoga studios, and any room that welcomes depth, contemplation, and a long view of time.

This piece is a tool for reflection and grounding. Whether used as a focal point for meditation, a daily anchor for perspective, or simply a place to rest your eyes and breathe, it encourages curiosity, ancestral connection, and trust in the long arc of human wisdom.

✨ May this artwork be a portal between what was, what is, and what is still becoming.

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "K Palana". The signature is fluid and cursive, with the first letter 'K' being particularly large and stylized.
